Fund Manager Commentary

Stocks fell and bonds rallied as uncertainty around US trade policies began to show up in weaker economic data. The S&P fell 3.2% with technology leading declines as the Nasdaq fell 4.9%. Smaller companies fared even worse dropping by over 8%. Interestingly non US markets rallied as investors rotated out of more expensive US markets into relatively cheaper options such as Europe +5.3%, Japan +0.3% and China which jumped 14% on optimism over their potential leading position in AI and further government stimulus. This kind of outperformance from the rest of the world over the US has rarely been seen for many years. Also defensive sectors such as Consumer Staples were suddenly in favor as the market rotated out of the past few years winners. Staples rose 5.5%, Real Estate rose 5.1% on lower bond yields, and Healthcare rose 1.3%. To the downside were Consumer Discretionary -10.3% and Communications -7.5%.

On a stock basis, Discretionary was so bad largely due to Tesla falling 28% as the reality of tumbling car sales in Europe and China and the cost of tariffs for the auto industry weighed heavily on the high valuations of a stock based on hope of future technological breakthroughs. The other mega caps in the magnificent 7 also struggled with Alphabet -16% and Amazon -11% the worst of the rest. The best performers included high quality growth stocks from sectors such as Health and Staples which all performed strongly with Eli Lilly rising 13% on continued strong growth of anti-obesity drugs. Coca-Cola rose 12% on continued strong growth in the drinks business, as did Pepsi up 9%. J&J also joined in on solid growth outlooks for their pharmaceutical portfolio, adding 9%. There were also some bright spots in tech as Nutanix reported acerating growth as they continue to benefit from positive desktop virtualization trends, rising 12%.

After 2 years of 20%+ returns for global equities, this year the outlook appears less favorable with the US trade policies and high valuations in US markets likely to weigh on performance. High quality companies in the Staples and Health sectors will likely continue to outperform a more volatile market as their business models tend to be much more defensive. Investment in technology such as AI and data centers is continuing at a great pace, so whilst these stocks have performed poorly so far this year their growth remains far superior to the wider market and will remains core holdings in the portfolio. We continue to avoid cyclical stocks that are most at risk from the potential trade war that the US seems to be pursuing.
